

A guide for traders selling goods, services and digital content at a distance

The Consumer Contracts (Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges) Regulations 2013 replace the current Consumer Protection (Distance Selling) Regulations 2000 and the Cancellation of Contracts made in a Consumer's Home or Place of Work etc Regulations 2008 for all contracts made from 13 June 2014. Although there are many similarities there are also important differences in the new Regulations, which will apply both to contracts made on and away from business premises, and introduce new rules for businesses providing digital content. These Regulations will affect most businesses that contract with consumers, irrespective of where and how the contract is entered into.

For ease of presentation, we have produced three guides covering contracts made on business premises, off business premises and at a distance. According to the type of business that you operate you may need to consult each guide. To help you decide, each guide starts with a definition of the types of contract that are covered and a list of those that are not.

This guide is for businesses that sell goods, services or digital content to consumers through distance contracts. The new Regulations will not be unfamiliar to businesses that have had to comply with the Consumer Protection (Distance Selling) Regulations 2000 (often referred to as the Distance Selling Regulations) but they do contain important differences that must be taken account of. The Regulations require detailed information to be given to consumers and introduce a 14 day cancellation period. In addition the Regulations prohibit the use of premium rate telephone helplines (for customers contacting you in connection with a contract that they have with you) and the use of so-called negative options to sell additional products to consumers that are incidental to the main contract. The Regulations also deal with the time that you take to deliver goods and who takes the risk when goods are being delivered to a consumer.

In the guide

What do the Regulations cover?

What do the Regulations not cover?

Sales contracts, service contracts and digital content

Information requirements

Right to cancel

Negative options for additional charges

Basic rate telephone helpline charges

Time for delivery of goods

Passing of risk

Inertia selling

Failure to comply with the Regulations

Further reading

What do the Regulations cover?

Most contracts made and negotiated between traders and consumers are covered, and the Regulations split these contracts into three types:

- off-premises contracts. There are four types of these contracts:
 - a contract made where a consumer and trader are together and agree the contract in a place that is not the trader's business premises - for example, in a consumer's home or place of work
 - a contract made where a consumer and trader are together and an offer is made by the consumer in a place that is not the trader's business premises - for example, where a consumer signs an order form during a visit to his home and the trader agrees the contract later
 - a contract that is agreed on a trader's business premises or through any means of distance communication immediately after a meeting with a consumer in a place that is not the trader's business premises. For example, a salesperson meets a consumer in the high street and convinces him of the benefits of buying a water filter; the consumer is then taken to the local office of the trader to sign the contract for the equipment. An example of this scenario using distance communication would be if the salesperson in the high street takes the consumer's email address and emails him the contract, which the consumer prints and returns by post
 - a contract made with the consumer during an excursion organised by the trader with the aim of selling or promoting their goods or services to the consumer. The Regulations do not define an 'excursion'; however, it is possible that this will cover a situation where a trader meets a consumer on holiday and invites him to travel with the trader to a different venue to be sold goods or services
- distance contracts. A contract made between a trader and a consumer where they are not together, which is negotiated and agreed by one or more means of distance communication - for example, by phone, post or over the internet. There must be an organised distance scheme for selling goods and/or services so the Regulations are unlikely to affect a business that sells a product at a distance as a one-off. For instance, a knitting wool shop that does not normally sell at a distance would not fall within the definition of a distance contract when a customer rings to ask for a ball of wool to be posted to him because he is unable to call into the shop - this is unlikely to be classed as an 'organised' distance selling scheme
- on-premises contracts. The Regulations define an on-premises contract as: 'a contract which is neither off-premises nor a distance contract', which effectively means a contract made on business premises, whatever they may be

'Business premises' will include a trader's permanent premises as well as temporary premises (such as a market stall) where they usually operate. This is a key definition with regard to the above contract types but it is not defined clearly by the Regulations.

These notes will cover the requirements of the Regulations when you sell goods, services or digital content through distance contracts. If you also sell on or off your business premises please see our other two guides:

A guide for traders selling goods, services and digital content from their premises

A guide for traders selling goods, services and digital content off their premises

What do the Regulations not cover?

The Regulations do not cover contracts for:

- gambling (covered by gambling legislation)
- financial services such as banking, credit, insurance or personal pensions. However, credit and insurance facilities will be affected if supplied with contracts for goods or services or when offered as an optional extra that the consumer must opt out of (see 'Effects of withdrawal or cancellation on ancillary contracts' and 'Negative options for additional charges' later)
- the construction of new buildings (or substantially new buildings by the conversion of existing buildings - such as a barn conversion) and the sale of immovable property. However, the construction of extensions to existing buildings will be covered
- residential letting contracts, but estate agency contracts for their work in connection with the sale or letting of properties are covered
- the supply of consumables by regular roundsmen such as milkmen - these visits must be frequent and regular to a consumer's home, residence or workplace
- package travel contracts
- timeshare and long-term holiday products, including resale and exchange contracts
- purchases from vending machines
- single telecom connections - such as payphones and internet café connections

Sales contracts, service contracts and digital content

The Regulations divide the content of the contract into three types:

- sales contracts. This includes contracts for the sale of goods and also for the supply of goods and services together. This will therefore include the sale of a book, a film on a DVD, the supply of software on a disc, and the supply and fitting of a patio
- service contracts. This covers contracts that are for services only - for example, the services of a personal trainer or lawyer. Supply of gas and electricity by the utility suppliers will also be covered by this definition, whereas gas and electricity will be classed as goods when sold in limited amounts - for example, batteries and gas in containers
- digital content. The supply of data through an intangible medium - for example, music and software downloads or streamed films

Information requirements

General

The Regulations require that you give certain information to consumers who buy goods, services or digital content from you at a distance. However, there are some types of contract that are exempt from this requirement:

- medicinal products or services that are either dispensed on prescription or available free under an NHS arrangement
- a contract for passenger transport services - such as bus, rail or flight tickets. However, you must provide the appropriate information if your contract is concluded by an electronic means such as a 'pay now' button

You must give consumers the information listed below in a way that is clear, comprehensible and appropriate to the means of distance communication before they enter into a contract with you. In addition, if you provide this information on a durable medium you must make sure that it is legible.

A durable medium is defined as paper, email or other medium that:

- allows the information to be addressed personally to the recipient
- enables the recipient to store the information and access it for future reference (this will include you placing the information in your customer's personal account area of your website, which he can access by logging in)
- allows unchanged reproduction of this information

The information that you are required to give is as follows:

- a) the main characteristics of the goods, services or digital content - you must give as much information as the means of communication allows
- b) your identity - such as your trading name
- c) the geographical address where you are established and, where applicable, a telephone number, fax number and email address to allow consumers to be able to contact you quickly and efficiently*
- d) if you are acting on behalf of another trader, their identity and geographical address*
- e) if you, or the trader who you are acting for, have a different address for consumer complaints this must also be given*
- f) the total price of the goods, services or digital content inclusive of tax (such as VAT). If this cannot be calculated in advance you must say how this will be calculated
- g) all delivery charges or any other costs - if these cannot be calculated in advance you must state that they are payable
- h) the monthly, or billing period, costs of open-ended contracts or subscriptions

- i) any additional costs for using a specific means of distance communication to make the contract - for example, if you make an extra charge for buying by phone as opposed to online*
- j) the arrangements for payment, delivery or performance and the time that you will take to deliver the goods, perform the services or supply the digital content *
- k) if you have one, your complaint handling policy. Providers of services should have a complaint handling policy in place as required by the Provision of Services Regulations 2009. In addition TSI approved codes of practice and some trade associations and professional bodies will also require a policy to be in place, which must be made available to consumers*
- l) the conditions, time limits and procedure for exercising a right to cancel, if there is one (the next section covers cancellation in detail). This information may be provided by correctly filling in and providing the 'Model instructions for cancellation' provided by the Regulations
- m) if you are expecting consumers to pay the costs of returning the goods after cancellation you must tell them, or if the goods cannot normally be returned by post (they are too large, for example) you must advise consumers of the cost of returning them. This information may be provided by correctly filling in and providing the 'Model instructions for cancellation' (see link above)*
- n) if you are offering a service contract that a consumer can expressly ask you to start within the cancellation period, you must tell him that he will be required to pay you the reasonable costs of the service that you have delivered up to the time of his cancellation within the cancellation period. This information may be provided by correctly filling in and providing the 'Model instructions for cancellation' (see link above)*
- o) if there are no cancellation rights for specific goods, services or digital content that you offer or there are circumstances in which consumers will lose their right to cancel you must inform them of this*
- p) if you are selling goods you should remind consumers that the goods you sell must be in conformity with the contract - for example, you might say: 'It is our responsibility to supply you with goods that meet your consumer rights. If you have any concerns that we have not met our legal obligations please contact us' *
- q) if you offer any after-sales consumer assistance, services or guarantees you must make consumers aware of this and any applicable conditions*
- r) if you are a member of a code of conduct you must inform consumers how they can obtain a copy of the code - for example, by providing a link to the code sponsor's website*
- s) if the consumer will enter into a contract of a fixed duration, he must be informed what this is. If the contract has no fixed length, or can be extended automatically he must be informed of the conditions under which he can terminate it
- t) you must inform consumers if there is a minimum duration under a contract - for example, a minimum period for a mobile phone contract*
- u) if consumers are required to give deposits or other financial guarantees you must inform them of this obligation and any applicable conditions*

- v) digital content functionality - this will include information about its language, duration, file type, access, updates, tracking, internet connection, geographical restrictions and any additional purchases required*
- w) digital content compatibility - information regarding both hardware and other software*
- x) the existence of any alternative dispute resolution schemes that you are subject to and how to access them*

[* If the means of distance communication that you are using limits the space or the time that is available to provide the information, these items may be provided in a different but appropriate way.]

If you do not give the information items 'g', 'h' or 'm' to the consumer he will not be required to pay these charges.

In the case of a public auction (see definition below), information items 'b' to 'e' may be replaced with the equivalent details of the auctioneers.

If you need to change any of this information before entering into a contract, or at any later stage, you must agree this with the consumer. Failure to do so will mean that the consumer is not bound by the change of information.

If a right of cancellation exists the consumer must be given, or have access to, a cancellation form, which must be in the following form (please note that this has been placed in a box for illustrative purposes):

Model cancellation form

To [here the trader's name, geographical address and, where available, fax number and email address are to be inserted by the trader]:

I/We [] hereby give notice that I/We [] cancel my/our contract of sale of the following goods [] / for the supply of the following service [],

Ordered on [] / received on [],

Name of consumer(s),

Address of consumer(s),

Signature of consumer(s) (only if this form is notified on paper),

Date

[*] Delete as appropriate

Failure to provide the information set out above would allow a consumer to claim that you have breached your contract with her and seek an appropriate remedy. The consumer would also be able to claim that you had breached your contract if she found that any of the above information that you had provided was incorrect.

Contracts concluded by electronic means

Where your contract is concluded by an electronic means, and places the consumer under an obligation to pay, you must ensure that information items 'a', 'f', 'g', 'h', 's' and 't' above are clearly, and prominently, brought to the consumer's attention immediately before she places her order.

You must also ensure that consumers expressly acknowledge that they are under an obligation to pay when they place their order. If you are using a button or similar function to enable the consumer to place their order this must be labelled in an easily legible manner with only the following words, 'order with obligation to pay'. You may use a different phrase, such as 'pay now', as long as it has a similar effect. If you do not meet this requirement the consumer will not be bound by the contract.

If you are concluding a contract through a website you must indicate in a clear and legible manner, at the very latest at the beginning of the ordering process, whether any delivery restrictions apply and the payment means that you will accept.

Using telephone calls to conclude a distance contract

You must start the conversation with the following information if you are calling consumers with the aim of concluding distance contracts:

- your identity
- the identity of the person on whose behalf you are making the call, if you are calling on behalf of another business
- the commercial purpose of the call

Confirming distance contracts

Once you have entered into a distance contract you must give the consumer confirmation of the contract on a durable medium. Your confirmation must include information items 'a' to 'x' above. You will not need to do this if you have already given this information on a durable medium prior to the conclusion of the contract.

You must give this information to the consumer no later than when the goods are delivered (so you could include it in the package with the goods), before performance of the service begins or, for digital content that is not on a tangible medium, within a reasonable time (which may be after the download begins).

Disputes

If there is a dispute with regard to your compliance with these information requirements, the burden is placed upon you to prove that you have done so. It is therefore important that you keep good business records.

Right to cancel

Contracts with no right to cancel

The following contracts do not have a right to cancel:

- medicinal products or services that are either dispensed on prescription or are available free under an NHS arrangement
- a contract for passenger transport services - such as bus, rail or flight tickets
- the supply of goods or services where prices are dependent upon fluctuations in the financial markets, which are beyond the control of the trader. Utility supplies of water, gas and electricity and district heating are excluded from this exemption (so the right to cancel remains)
- the supply of goods that are made to the customer's specification or are personalised - for example, a made to measure suit or pair of curtains, or a gift that has the recipient's name engraved on it. However, this exemption will not apply to items made to a customer's specification simply by combining stock items - such as a computer put together from stocked parts or a car ordered from a fixed menu of items
- the supply of goods that are liable to deteriorate or expire rapidly - such as a delivery of fresh flowers or meat
- the supply of alcoholic drinks (such as vintage wines bought for investment purposes) where the following apply:
 - the price has been fixed by the contract
 - delivery can only take place after 30 days
 - the value is subject to market fluctuations beyond the control of the seller
- contracts where the consumer has specifically requested the trader to call to carry out urgent repairs or maintenance. However, this exemption will not apply to other goods or other services provided at the same time. An example would be a plumber who receives a call to replace a broken immersion heater, a price being agreed over the phone, whilst there the plumber also offers to repair a dripping tap - this extra work, if done during the visit, would retain a cancellation right
- the supply of newspapers, periodicals or magazines. However, subscription contracts will retain a cancellation right

- contracts concluded at a public auction - this exemption, previously in the Distance Selling Regulations, no longer applies to eBay and other online auctions. Therefore traders selling via so-called online auction sites will have to give consumers a right to cancel and comply with all aspects of these Regulations irrespective of whether they are selling the goods by auction or through 'buy it now' offers. A 'public auction' is defined in the Regulations as: 'a method of sale where:
 - goods or services are offered by a trader to a consumer through a transparent, competitive bidding procedure run by an auctioneer
 - the consumers attend or are given the possibility to attend in person
 - the successful bidder is bound to purchase the goods or services'
- the supply of accommodation, transport of goods, vehicle rental services, catering or services related to leisure activities if the contract provides for a specific date or period of performance - for example, hotel bookings, courier services, car hire, restaurant bookings and theatre tickets for specific dates

In addition consumers will lose their right to cancel if they:

- unseal goods that are not suitable for return if they are unsealed, due to health protection or hygiene reasons
- unseal audio, video recordings or computer software that were sealed at the time of delivery
- combine goods with other goods after delivery so that they become inseparable

Cancellation period

There are two rights for consumers who decide that they do not wish to proceed with a contract. They are able to:

- withdraw their offer if it has not been accepted by the trader - for example, by placing an order for goods online where the terms make clear that a contract is not entered into until the goods are despatched. This is an open-ended right, which will end when the contract is made, after which they can move to their right to cancel if appropriate
- cancel a contract. Within a specified period of time, the Regulations give consumers the right to pull out of a contract that they would otherwise be bound by providing the contract is not one where there is no right to cancel (see above)

Cancellation periods are set out in the table below. The periods start from when the contract was made until the end of the period shown in the table. Reference will be made to sales contracts, service contracts and digital content and you should refer back to the definitions provided earlier.

Type of contract	Cancellation period ends
A service contract	14 days after the day on which the contract was made
The supply of digital content not supplied on a tangible medium	14 days after the day on which the contract was made*
A sales contract (goods or goods and services) but see below	14 days after the day on which the goods come into the physical possession of the consumer or the person that she asks you to deliver the goods to
A sales contract consisting of an order for multiple goods, which are delivered on different days	14 days after the day on which the last of the goods come into the physical possession of the consumer or the person that she asks you to deliver the goods to
A sales contract consisting of an order for multiple lots or pieces, which are delivered on different days	14 days after the day on which the last of the lots or pieces come into the physical possession of the consumer or the person that she asks you to deliver the goods to
A sales contract for regular delivery of goods during a period of longer than one day	14 days after the day on which the first of the goods come into the physical possession of the consumer or the person that she asks you to deliver the goods to

[* This period will not apply if the consumer has expressly requested that the download is started within the cancellation period, has acknowledged the loss of their cancellation right and has been given the required information. See 'Supply of digital content in the cancellation period' below.]

If you do not provide consumers with information about their right to cancel (information item 'I' above) their cancellation period is extended to 14 days after the day that you do give them this information. The longest that this period can be extended to is 12 months from the day after the normal cancellation period would have ended.

A consumer can withdraw from the contract, or cancel within the cancellation period, by informing you that he wishes to do so. There is no requirement for how this should be done but in the event of a dispute the burden falls upon the consumer to prove that he did cancel within the cancellation period. Therefore the consumer will be well advised to ensure that he has some durable proof of his cancellation, which you could ask for if there was a dispute regarding whether or when he had informed you of his decision to cancel.

The Regulations do offer some guidance on how consumers can exercise their right to cancel a contract:

- they can use the model cancellation form (shown above), but they don't have to
- they can use any other clear statement to inform you
- if you offer an online cancellation option on your website consumers need not use it
- if consumers do use your online option you must acknowledge receipt of their cancellation, using a durable medium, without delay
- cancellation is only effective if the communication is sent to you before the end of the cancellation period - the key time is when the communication was sent, not when you received it

Effects of withdrawal or cancellation

If a consumer withdraws from a contract or exercises their right to cancel, both your and their obligations under the contract are ended. In addition you must reimburse the consumer all that he has paid you, including any original delivery costs (you cannot charge any cancellation fees). However, if a consumer has expressly requested a delivery method that is more expensive than your basic cost, you are only obliged to refund your basic delivery cost - for example, if a consumer has opted for your next day delivery service rather than your standard method by second class post. You may also be able to deduct the value of services that you have provided, at the consumer's express request, during the cancellation period (see 'Supply of a service in the cancellation period' below).

You must reimburse the consumer without undue delay and within 14 days from the day after the consumer informs you of his decision. If the consumer is sending goods back to you, you need to reimburse within 14 days of the day you get the goods back or, if earlier, 14 days from the day you receive proof from the consumer that he has sent the goods back. You must reimburse the consumer using the same payment method he used originally but you can come to an express agreement with the consumer to use an alternative method.

Finally you have a right to deduct an amount from the reimbursement (or charge a consumer) if he has diminished the value of the goods by handling them beyond what is necessary to establish their nature, characteristics and function. The Regulations establish a test as to whether consumers have handled the goods in a way beyond what might reasonably be allowed in a shop. This is likely to be a controversial area of the Regulations for both consumers and traders and will ultimately be a matter for a court to decide. However, the following examples will attempt to illustrate this concept:

- a consumer returns a shirt that comes in a presentation box, which he had opened and removed all the pins and packaging to try it on. It is reasonable to expect a consumer to remove packaging to try on or examine an item, so you should make no deduction for this
- a consumer returns underwear but has removed the hygienic covering and appears to have tried the item on without it. The consumer has not acted reasonably by removing the cover to try the underwear on and you can make a deduction for diminishing the value
- a consumer returns a shirt, which you can see has clearly been worn. The consumer has not acted reasonably and you can make a deduction for diminishing the value
- a consumer returns flat pack furniture, which he has clearly attempted to assemble by opening packs of screws and trying to put parts together. The consumer has not acted reasonably and you can make a deduction for diminishing the value

You will not be able to make any deduction for diminishing the value of the goods if you have not provided consumers with the information about their right to cancel - information item 'l' above.

Return of the goods following cancellation

You must collect goods from a consumer, following cancellation, if you have offered to do so. In all other cases it is the consumer's responsibility to send the goods back to you or hand them to someone that you have authorised to collect them. Consumers must send the goods back to an address that you have specified. If you haven't given an address they can send them back to any address that you have specified for consumers to use to contact you. Failing that, consumers can send the goods back to any place where you conduct your business.

The consumer must not delay her return of the goods and should send them back within 14 days of when she informed you of her decision to cancel.

Unless you have agreed to pay the return costs, the consumer must do so. However, this is reliant upon you giving her the information regarding this - information item 'm' above. If you have not given this information, you must pay these costs.

You must have agreed with the consumer if she is to pay for the return of the goods that you will collect - if, for example, they are too big to return by post. You must make this clear in your contract.

Supply of a service in the cancellation period

The Regulations do allow for service contracts - and for the service element of a sales contract (if there is one) - to be started within the cancellation period (and for you to charge for the services provided during that period if the customer later cancels) providing that the consumer has expressly requested this.

A consumer loses her right to cancel a service contract that has been performed fully within the cancellation period, providing she requested this and acknowledged that she would lose her right to cancel once the contract had been performed fully. This will not apply to gas or electricity utility contracts.

In the case of a sales contract involving services that have been completed, the consumer still has the right to cancel and return the goods (as described above) but will have to pay for, or receive no reimbursement for, the service element of the contract. For example, in the case of a satellite receiver (ordered online) that was delivered and fitted on the same day, the customer must pay for labour costs but may still remove and return the receiver to the trader.

Where a service has been started within the cancellation period at the express request of the consumer, but has not been completed, the consumer still has the right to cancel. However, the consumer will have to pay for the service used during the time up to when she informed you of her decision to cancel. What she should pay will be in proportion to what has been supplied in comparison with the full contract price. The amount is to be calculated either:

- on the basis of the total price - or
- if the total price is excessive, based upon the market price of what has been supplied, calculated by comparing the prices for similar services from other traders

A consumer will not have to pay you for services supplied in the cancellation period if you have not provided her with information items 'l' and 'n' above. Nor will the consumer have to pay if she had not expressly requested you to start within the cancellation period. Therefore if you start to deliver a service on your own initiative during the cancellation period the consumer will not have to pay you if she decides to cancel.

Supply of digital content in the cancellation period

You can supply digital content that is not on a tangible medium (in other words, is downloaded, streamed, etc) within the cancellation period provided the consumer has expressly requested this and acknowledged that by doing this she has lost her right to cancel.

However, if you have not met the following criteria, the consumer will still be able to cancel within the cancellation period and will not have to pay you for any digital content supplied:

- she must have expressly requested that you begin the supply of the digital content during the cancellation period
- she must have acknowledged that her right to cancel would be lost
- you must have confirmed her express request and acknowledgement of the loss of her cancellation right as part of your confirmation of her contract

Effects of withdrawal or cancellation on ancillary contracts

An ancillary contract is one that relates to the main contract and can be provided by you or a third party with whom you have an arrangement. Financial services (generally exempted from these Regulations) are covered if they are an ancillary contract.

Where a consumer withdraws an offer or cancels a contract, any ancillary contract will also be terminated without further cost, subject to the various provisions above. You must inform any trader with whom the consumer has the ancillary contract that their contract has been terminated.

For example, if you have sold a car with a separate insurance contract and the consumer cancels within the cancellation period, they will not have to pay for the insurance (or they must be refunded the cost). If the consumer has consented to the insurance starting within the cancellation period they will have to pay the proportion of the cost up to the time of cancellation as described above.

Negative options for additional charges

Where there are additional items linked to the main contract (for example, insurance and/or car hire with a contract for a holiday, or gift-wrapping when purchasing a present) paying for these items as well must not be the default option. Consumers should always be asked to expressly consent to additional charges. For example, consumers should not have to untick a box to indicate they do not want optional insurance against damage to their goods whilst being delivered.

Consumers will not be liable for any additional payments that they have not actively consented to and they have the right to request that they are refunded for these payments.

Basic rate telephone helpline charges

If you provide a telephone line for consumers to contact you in relation to a contract that they have entered into with you, you cannot charge more than a basic rate for this service. Therefore you can only charge normal geographic or mobile rates. A consumer should not pay more to contact you about her purchase than she would to phone a friend or relative.

Consumers who are charged more than the basic rate are entitled to claim any overcharge back from you.

You should check carefully whether your phone line does cost consumers more than basic rates. In addition to numbers beginning 09, other revenue-sharing numbers such as 084, 0871, 0872 or 0873 would not comply. Nor would 0870 numbers, which would vary according to the consumer's own phone tariff.

The following numbers will comply with the Regulations:

- geographic numbers - starting 01, 02 or 03
- 0800 and 0808 - although these currently may incur a charge for those ringing from a mobile, Ofcom-proposed reforms will soon mean that these will be free in all circumstances
- mobile numbers - starting 07

Time for delivery of goods

Unless you agree otherwise it is your responsibility to deliver the goods that you have sold to a consumer. If you do not agree a delivery time you must deliver the goods without undue delay and certainly no later than 30 days from the day after the contract was made.

A consumer may treat a contract as being at an end and request a full refund in any of the following circumstances:

- you refuse to deliver the goods
- you fail to deliver within the agreed time and it is clear from the circumstances, or from what the consumer has told you, that this agreed time was essential
- the consumer has specified an appropriate delivery period, which you fail to meet

If your contract consists of a variety of goods, some of which you fail to deliver on time, the consumer has the right, as an alternative to ending the contract, to cancel that part of the order or return goods that have already been delivered. You must then reimburse him without undue delay for the goods that have been cancelled or rejected. If the goods form part of a commercial unit that would be devalued or have its character changed if they were split up, the consumer can only cancel the order for the goods or reject them as a whole.

The Regulations do not prevent consumers also seeking other remedies that they are entitled to for late deliveries. As an example, a consumer who suffers delays as the result of the late delivery of parts of a fitted kitchen may be able to claim the wasted labour costs of their fitters if they are able to quantify this.

Passing of risk

Unless a consumer arranges their own carrier, the goods that you deliver to him remain at your risk until they come into the physical possession of the consumer or the person that they ask you to deliver the goods to. Therefore if your carrier fails to deliver the goods, or delivers them to the wrong address, this is your responsibility and not the consumer's. If you do not rectify this you may be liable for a claim for late delivery (see above).

If the consumer uses their own carrier, you cease to be responsible for the goods once the carrier receives them.

Inertia selling

Finally, the Regulations repeat an important consumer protection measure. If you send unsolicited goods to consumers they are not obliged to pay for them and can keep them as an unconditional gift. Consumers do not have to take any action, such as informing you, if they receive unsolicited goods, they can just keep them.

Sending unsolicited goods and demanding payment for them is a prohibited practice, and a criminal offence, under the Consumer Protection from Unfair Trading Regulations 2008.

Failure to comply with the Regulations

If you fail to comply with the Regulations, in addition to remedies available to consumers for breach of contract, enforcement bodies such as trading standards services and the Department of Enterprise, Trade and Investment in Northern Ireland may be able to seek an injunction (interdict in Scotland) from a court to secure compliance.

Further reading

More information is available in the Implementing Guidance published by the Department for Business, Innovation and Skills.

Please note

This leaflet is not an authoritative interpretation of the law and is intended only for guidance. Any legislation referred to, while still current, may have been amended from the form in which it was originally enacted. Please contact us for further information.

Relevant legislation

Consumer Contracts \(Information, Cancellation and Additional Charges\) Regulations 2013
Consumer Protection \(Amendment\) Regulations 2014 \(regulation 9\)

Last reviewed/updated: April 2014